SMUGGLER BAND'S TRIAL POSTPONED

Carrijo Springs, Texas, Sept. 29.—The trial of 14 alleged ammunition smugglers, charged with the murder of deputy sheriff Candelario Ortiz, has been transferred to Pearsall because of the improbability of securing a jury here. When the transfer was ordered, one juror had been accepted out of 141 talesmen examined. The population of Dimmitt county is sparse, totaling about 10,000 in the 1910 census. The case will be taken up again September 29 at Pearsall.

W. Evans, of Brenham, Texas, special agent for the Santa Fe railway, identified today Charles, alias Barney, Cline, the American among the alleged smugglers, as a man deported from Merryville, La., February 25 last, because of his activities in a strike there. Cline has asked for a separate trial.

Several of the rebels also were wounded.

Which Way? the Question Every Girl Must Decide

(By Dorothy Dix.)

THE picture which accompanies this article shows a young girl standing at the cross roads of her life, trying to decide which way to take. In one direction, for a little way at least, and that is as far as the eyes of youth can see—the path stretches straight before her. She sees herself dressed in the fine clothes that would set off her youth and beauty as a frame does a pretty picture, the kind of clothes that she has sold over the counter to other women, but has never had herself. She sees herself wearing "creations" instead of hand-me-down suits, sweeping into gilded restaurants where there are shaded lights, and music, and other gorgeously dressed women eating dainty food and sipping expensive wine.

She sees herself rolling about in automobiles instead of hanging on to street car straps. She sees herself riding in the limousine of a millionaire, punching the time clock at 3 o'clock in a department store. She sees ease and luxury, and all the things that her ardent youth craves so passionately, waiting for her to take if only she chooses the primrose path.

And when she looks down the other bend of the road, the straight and narrow road, she sees nothing before her but hard traveling. She sees poverty and self denial, and hard work. She sees herself growing old, and faded, and gray. The little Miss Smith in the office where she works, a woman whose meager pay envelope barely enables her to meet the necessities of life and has never given her any of its fruits.

Or if she marries she sees herself FORCED INTO FEDERAL ARMY; VASQUEZ FLEES

Juarez Officials Ask His Return, but His Story to El Paso Police Secures His Release Here.

Andres Vasquez, a Mexican-American citizen, living at 635 Gladstone street, who three weeks ago made a trip to Juarez, where he was involuntarily pressed into the service of the federal army, is free. Friday afternoon the unwilling soldier saw a chance to make his escape, and he made his getaway, coming to this side.

Officers at the Juarez police station "phoned Capt. Lon Garner that the man was coming to this side. They reported that he was drunk and the belief was that he intended to raise a disturbance. The captain was requested to see his efforts in the morning, and he was taken back to Juarez. Vasquez, perfectly sober, was held up at the Stanton street bridge, and later turned over to the police. He told the police the story about being forced into the federal army. Friday, he said, was the first opportunity that he had to make his escape and he took advantage of it. The police found the story to be true, after an investigation, and they released the man.

BILLY ADOLPH HELD ON WOMAN'S CHARGE
On complaint of Miss Estelle Winn, living at 715 North Kansas street, W. K. Adolph, better known as "Billy" Adolph, was arrested by constable J. W. Brown Saturday morning on a charge of theft by bailie. The complaint was filed in the court of justice of the peace James J. Murphy. In the complaint Miss Winn charges Adolph with taking two of her diamonds and converting them to his own use. Judge Murphy fixed the defendant's bond at $500.

Miss Winn, it is said, told the county officers that about six months ago she left her home with a pendant in which were two diamonds. These, she said, she intended having taken out and placed in a pin. Miss Winn said that she stopped at the Hotel Angelus for breakfast and there met Adolph. Adolph, she said, took the diamonds, saying that he would have the pin fixed for her, but that she has not seen them since.

following in her mother's footsteps, the poor, tired, family drudge, with always a baby in one hand, and a frying pan in the other; the one of the household who bears the heaviest burden, and wears the shabbiest clothes, and works the longest hours, and receives the least appreciation.

And so the poor young girl, with her pretty face, and the arid desires of her youth for pleasure, stands at the cross roads and asks herself which way she shall go, and if it pays to be good?

The Road to Take.
Take the right turn of the road, little sister. Look a little closer at what is called the primrose path, and you will see that it is nothing but one of those treacherous bogs covered with flowers that look bright and beautiful to the eye, but into which the traveler, who tries to cross, sinks into the slime and perishes. If you could see under the blooms you would find that every crimson flower has its roots in the dead heart of some poor foolish young girl like you. That is why its flowers are always blood red.

Believe me, the road called "the easiest way" is the hardest way on earth for a woman. No other road is so stony, or so cuts and bruises the feet of woman, and so reads it. And it's such a short road, too, little sister. Rarely more than seven long years from start to finish, the finish that ends in the grave.

The Why of It All.
Did you ever stop to think why the painted women dash their faces with rouge, and put belladonna in their eyes? They paint roses on their wan cheeks because disease has robbed them of the one that nature planted there. They put belladonna in their eyes to

INVENTORY TAKEN IN POSTOFFICE
Every Branch of Postal Service Stops at Noon Saturday to Take Stock of Equipment.

At noon Saturday every mail clerk, postoffice clerk and official of the government mail service stopped work long enough to take stock of all the equipment in the possession of the postal service. This is the first check of the kind to be made and was made in every postoffice on every railway mail service car and terminal office in the United States. The check was made to ascertain the amount of equipment in active service in the postoffice department. In El Paso the check was made in the postoffice equipment, the equipment on the transfer of office and in the mail cars and also the American mail sacks in the Juarez postoffice.

On Oct. 1 and continuing for seven days a check and count of all Mexican and American mail postage attached, will be made at this post by the chief clerk's office of the railway postoffice. This check will be universal, in order to ascertain the amount of foreign mail handled by each country in the postal union, and the amount of postage attached.

HUGE SKELETON IN FRENCH MUSEUM

known to paleontologists which stood eighteen feet tall.

Speaks Frankly to King.
Senor Maura, the Spanish Conservative leader, who has twice resigned the premiership of Spain, has a way of speaking frankly to his royal master. King Alfonso, just now Paris is amused at two remarks made by Maura to the king in public.

When he resigned Maura said: "Kings who amuse themselves at playing with crowns frequently lose them."

On the second occasion he said: "The premier in most constitutional countries must have two things in order to govern, first the confidence of parliament, and second the confidence of the crown. In Spain, however, three things are necessary, the confidence of parliament, the confidence of the crown, and confidence in the confidence of the crown."

give them back the brightness that tears have washed out of them. And have you wondered why such women invariably take to drink or drugs? It is to forget.

It is to throttle memory, and dull thought, so that they may forget for an hour what they once were, and the sort of creatures they are doomed to become.

It is early true that there is nothing else in the world so little gay as what is termed the gay life. Listen to its tawdry, it is more like the crackling of thorns under a pot, with no ring of merriment in it. The women who lead it never smile, for there is no happiness there. You will see on their faces fear, and bitter mockery, and cold insolence, and jealousy and rage, and every evil passion that can tear at the human heart, but you will never see that look of calm peace and content that shows that a woman has got her soul's desire, and that all is well with her.

"The Primrose Path" Is Death.
If you take the primrose path, little sister, you may get a few fine clothes, a little rich food, a little luxury, but do not forget that you will get other things also. You will get a tortured conscience, and you will get shame, and you will get fear always with you, lest your beauty fade and your tenuous hold upon some man be broken. And you shall know cruelty and abuse as no other woman ever knows it, for it is the way of men to break their toys when they have worn of them. And you shall have a brief life span, for that is the motto of the primrose path. "A short life and a merry one." And if the primrose path is not so alluring at short range as it appears at a distance, neither is the straight and narrow path so hard and barren in reality as it looks in prospect. The woman who trends it may wear home-spun, but no other woman draws her skirts away from her as if she was a leper. She has the respect and admiration of those about her, and believe me, little sister, these are a better garment in which to be clothed than the silks and satins that a woman has bought at the price of her soul.

Her Own Respect.
Above all, she has her own self respect, and that is the one thing that is absolutely necessary to any real happiness. As long as we can look ourselves in the face with a clear conscience none of us can be utterly miserable.

The girl who chooses the better way may look forward to the supreme happiness of life, that of being married to a good man who loves and honors her, and to having little children into whose clear eyes she is not afraid to look, and to establish a home over which no shadow of a "past" rests.

That is denied the girl who takes the wrong turn of the road. No matter how she repents, or how she tries to retrace her steps, there is always the haunting ghost of what she has been to darken her life.

Take the right turn of the road, little sister. It pays to be good.
